Course Description and Objective

This course examines what social and cognitive psychology as well as behavioral genetics can tell us about political phenomena. We will go beyond describing what happened in politics and instead identify explanations for why we observe certain political behaviors by studying individual-level psychological processes. For example, why and how do people identify with certain groups such as political parties? How do people form political attitudes and how do they make decisions in the political realm? You will be introduced to various theories as well as their empirical evidence that aim to explain these processes and help us apply their insights to make sense of political behavior in the U.S. and beyond. Throughout the course, you will also be introduced to experimental methods as a tool to conduct and evaluate research in political psychology.

The format of this class will primarily reflect that of a seminar, as we will devote a significant amount of time to discussing and understanding political phenomena in the context of psychological theories. Critical thinking and a vibrant class discussion are essential to the structure of this course.

When this course is over, you should have a general understanding of four things:

1. Individual-level processes that affect political behavior such as cognition, emotions, personality, behavioral genetics, and general information processing.
2. Intergroup relations and their impact on political behavior such as group identity, prejudice, and discrimination.
3. Different ways to study political psychology empirically.
4. The competency of the American public (or really any public) when it comes to political decision-making, thinking, and behavior.

Required Text:

The required book for this class is “The Oxford Handbook of Political Psychology” (Second Edition) by Leonie Huddy, David Sears, and Jack Levy (ISBN-13: 978-0199760107, ISBN-10: 0199760101).

Other readings can be found on eLC. Most of the additional readings will be scientific articles from academic journals. You should comprehend what the studies did and how they went about their research generally. Readings will be covered on the midterm and the final exam so I strongly recommend reading them on time and writing a short paragraph summary to be prepared for class as well as for the exams.

Evaluation:

Midterm: There will be a midterm exam to make sure that you are familiar with the core concepts of political psychology research we have covered up to that point. The exam will primarily consist of multiple-choice questions with varying levels of difficulty. As of now, the midterm exam is scheduled for Thursday, September 27th.

Final Exam: The final exam will consist of two essay questions. The first essay question tests your breadth of knowledge regarding political psychology—that is, whether you can bring together various strands of literature and integrate them into a response that reflects the complexity of the field. The second essay question aims to assess your depth of knowledge regarding a specific course topic and its corresponding theoretical and empirical foundations. As of now, the final exam is scheduled for Tuesday, December 11th from 12:00 - 3:00 pm.

Short Paper: You will pick a political phenomenon or current political event of your interest (please discuss your choice with me in advance) and try to explain it from a psychological perspective drawing on the readings, lectures, and data to support your argument. Short papers can range from 8 to 10 pages (double spaced). As of now, the assignment is due on Friday, November 16th.

Readings and Quizzes: The required readings typically include one chapter of the textbook per class session. If any additional readings are assigned they will be made available electronically on eLC. It is important that you stay current with these readings so that you can follow along with lectures and participate in class discussions. Please complete the reading assignments before the first class each week. There will be unannounced short quizzes (3-5 questions) based on the lectures as well as the assigned readings for that week. Make sure you are familiar with key terms from the book and results from the articles.

In-Class Participation: If you know something, say something! And if you have a question, other people are likely to have questions, too. So do not hesitate to speak up. In addition, we will have class discussions that should demonstrate your critical reflection on the material covered in class and your reading assignments.

Attendance: I am sure you already know this but just to make sure: You are expected to come to class, to be attentive and engaged in the lecture, and to participate in class discussion. You should not be texting, talking, or surfing the internet while class is in session.

Grading Scale for Final Semester Grades

100-94 A	79-77 C+	59-0 F
93-90 A-	76-74 C
89-87 B+	73-70 C-
86-84 B	69-67 D+
83-80 B-	66-60 D

Please note that there is no standard rounding policy. Rounding decisions will be made on a case-by-case basis.

Assignment Percentage Breakdown:

- 15% Attendance and Participation
- 15% Quizzes
- 20% Midterm
- 25% Short Paper
- 25% Final Exam

Late Assignments, Incompletes, and Extensions

Late assignments will be docked 5 percent per day (half letter grade), for each day that a project is late (including weekends). I cannot grant incompletes in the course, except in cases of emergency or where university policy applies. If you need a (reasonable) extension, come talk to me. I can be a friendly person.

Office Hours

Students who are having difficulty with the course materials and/or assignments are encouraged to see me during office hours. I am not (always) scary. Don't be afraid to come by. However, please note that office hours are for clarification of material, not for recreating a lecture if you skipped class.

Syllabus Policy:

I reserve the right to make changes to the syllabus if necessary. I will give you fair notice (at least a week) if something, such as a reading assignment, is to change.

Disability Resource Center

If you anticipate needing classroom or exam accommodations due to the impact of a disability or medical condition, you must register for services with the Disability Resource Center. Additional information can be found here: <http://drc.uga.edu/>

Withdrawal Policy

Undergraduate students can only withdraw from four courses and receive a withdrawal-passing (WP) grade while enrolled at the University. Students can drop any class without penalty during the drop/add period at the beginning of every semester. Dropped courses during the drop/add period do not qualify as withdrawals. Instructors have the ability to withdraw a student from the class due to excessive absences (see course attendance policy). Please review the policy here: <http://www.reg.uga.edu/policies/withdrawals>

Culture of Honesty Policy

You are responsible for knowing and complying with the policy and procedures relating to academic honesty. To understand what constitutes dishonest work, as defined by the University, please carefully review the policy here: <https://ovpi.uga.edu/academichonesty/academic-honesty-policy>.
